Dear hiring manager,

I'm writing this letter to express my interest in the nursing assistant position available for Fieldfair Clinic in Louisville. As an experienced nursing assistant working independently in Washington, hearing about this new position in Louisville, where I am moving, greatly interests me. After reviewing the guidelines and qualifications for this position on Fieldfair's website, I learned that my skills and passions align with the goals and mission of the clinic. I believe I could be a benefit to Fieldfair Clinic.

While pursuing my nursing education and experience through school and previous positions, I learned how to create a lighter environment for patients by having a candidly positive attitude during work. I bring many different skills to the clinic that can be valuable to both patients and peers. In my previous roles as a nursing assistant, I specialized in infection control for high-risk patients, and I also helped administer medications, maintain rooms and organize aseptic procedures. I work well with others, communicating quickly and clearly during procedures.

During procedures, I help ensure patient safety and comfort by:

- Maintaining a sterile room, work environment and utensils at all times.
- Monitoring who enters and exits the room to comply with high sanitation standards.
- Preparing patients for procedures by talking with them about the processes and answering their questions.
- Talking with family members as they enter the facility to explain the condition and treatment details completely.

I'm excited to present my skills through this letter and my resume because I believe I'm the best candidate for your clinic team. Working in a hospital has prepared me for handling various kinds of patient situations, such as helping patients' families or patients with no available contacts for support. I cared for many patients throughout my work in the hospital, so the change of pace to a clinic setting is definitely something I'd enjoy.

In the past, I've helped train other nursing assistants after sufficient time working in the hospital. I believe that, with my background in helping nurses and patients, I can be an excellent clinic nursing assistant at Fieldfair. Thank you for taking the time to review my materials. I look forward to hearing from you about this wonderful opportunity.

All the best,

Allison Queen
