Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm thrilled to be applying for the Adjunct Instructor position in the history department at Glendale University. I'm currently earning my Ph.D. in history at the neighboring Willow Tree University and believe that this position would help me achieve my ultimate goal of becoming an experienced History Professor. I look forward both to helping students enrolled in prerequisite courses feel enthusiastic about history and to delve deeper into medieval history with your upperclassmen.

I currently teach a course at Willow Tree University called "Medieval Lives," which is a prerequisite course that focuses on the habits and mindsets of ordinary people in the middle ages and emphasizes cross-cultural studies. While I inherited some of this course's materials from the previous instructor, I've also taken the time to develop some of my own scaffolded assignments in alignment with the department's regulations. My personalized materials include readings from historians offering alternative perspectives on medieval myths about the feudal system and weekly writing assignments culminating in a larger research paper.

So far, 83% of the class is on track to pass the course, which is 7% higher than usual. During the recent mid-term evaluations from my students, many of them praised the course for helping them feel more engaged with history, despite majoring in other subjects. I'm excited about the opportunity at Glendale University to continue sharing and learning with general education students at your university while also having the new opportunity of teaching higher-level courses.

Thank you for considering me for the History Adjunct Instructor position at Glendale University. I've included my CV, references and list of publications in this application packet, as requested. If you'd like, I'd be happy to come to your institution to give a sample presentation to give you a better idea of my teaching style and materials.

Sincerely,

Sylvie Juliana
